

"A corporate novel chronicles a young woman's meteoric rise at a coal mining company. A dramatically taut tale propelled by artful characterization and political relevance."

-Kirkus Reviews

If you are anti-coalminer, a climate champion or a stubborn environmentalist, this book about Francine, a strong and successful corporate young woman, is NOT for you. As the coalminers' dragon, Francine rises to the top of OHARA Mining and saves its miners and the company from ruin, while still finding time for love.

Francine will appeal to readers who like strong female protagonists, corporate romance and intrigue, and adventurous international settings.

After an international career taking him from The Hague, Brussels, Paris, and Geneva to Washington, D.C., traveling worldwide, John Schwartz resides as a writer in Virginia and blogs at johnschwartzauthor.com/blog.
